Anchoring Arab Risk: Nasco Re's Strategic Vanguard

The Keynote Address: stabilizing regional capital in an era of transition delivered by Joe Azar, Chief Executive Officer of Nasco Re

Interview: Joe Azar, CEO of Nasco Re - France

The true measure of corporate endurance is not how well an organization defends its status quo, but how boldly it shapes its evolution. At the 35th General Arab Insurance Federation Conference (GAIF 2026), hosted within the King Hussein Bin Talal Convention Centre in Jordan, the conversations shifted decisively. It was clear that returning to foundational insurance principles requires far more than passive capital retention—it demands a total transformation of execution models.

As a premier Diamond Partner of this definitive industry gathering, Nas-co Re stepped forward under the strategic leadership of CEO Joe Azar to lead this conversation. This comprehensive, multi-page special feature chronicles Nasco Re's pivotal impact across the four-day assembly. We pull back the curtain on the key strategic discussions inside their Special GAIF Gala Dinner, step onto the main stage to deliver the full transcript of Chief Executive Joe Azar's keynote address, and provide an analytical breakdown of the formal technical panels. Throughout these pages, we highlight the strategic vision articulated by CEO Joe Azar, whose keynote address and executive engagements framed Nasco Re's approach to growth, resilience, technological innovation, and regional market leadership.

The definitive social and collaborative anchor of the conference calendar was the Nasco Re Special GAIF Gala Dinner. Bringing together an elite assembly of regional regulatory authorities, direct underwriting executives, and international reinsurance brokers, the gathering functioned as a highly effective networking hub where major cross-border capacity agreements were finalized.

To explore the strategic mechanisms behind this corporate evolution, Chief Executive Officer Joe Azar sat down to outline the balance between global capacity and regional autonomy: Importantly, Azar reiterated that this partnership is built upon absolute leadership continuity, keeping the group's foundational management completely intact.

The visionary highlight of the summit came from the main stage, where Nasco Re CEO Joe Azar delivered a highly anticipated address focusing on structural market evolution and resilience. Crucially, Azar addressed the company's powerful market position, driven by the global capacity, deep technical expertise, and extensive regional footprint that define the group's standalone legacy.

Strategic Keynote Highlights by Joe Azar

During the event, Joe Azar, Chief Executive Officer of Nasco Re, delivered a significant keynote speech focusing on structural market evolution and resilience:

- Back to Principles: This GAIF statement is an excellent message to remind all concerned of the fundamentals, notably following underwriting best technical standards and privileging strong governance. With the "return to principles," we should restore discipline and secure more stability in conducting our business. However, this necessary action should not prevent us from looking also at the best roadmap to move forward and achieve the transformation required, given the many challenges faced by our industry. Today, the ambition of most insurers is to re-engineer every aspect of the business, optimize selection and pricing, design innovative products, push the insurability boundaries, and adopt smart distribution channels for wider accessibility. Higher resilience, more relevance, and deeper transformation will be needed alongside the principles to achieve sustainable growth.

- Challenge: The geopolitical tensions in the region represent today incontestably the most important challenge for the insurance industry. The potential escalation and the eventual outbreak of a large-scale war across the region create more uncertainty as to oil supply and prices with a respective impact on inflation. Such a difficult landscape will drive further competition and lead to slower premium growth, thus narrowing margins under the pressure of higher overheads and an increase in claims.
- AI Development: AI is gaining rapid ground across the MENA region with the view of enhancing operational efficiency. UAE and Saudi markets are leading this transformation thanks to a suitable digital ecosystem and the support of supervisory authorities. The improved risk selection and claims adjustment should enhance underwriting discipline and profitability. The management of Nat Cat aggregate exposure per geo-zone, supported by satellite imagery to provide accurate measurement of weather data and loss indicators, could permit the implementation of innovative reinsurance solutions.
- Emerging Risks: The probability of a COVID-19 scale pandemic occurring again within the next 25 years is said to reach 50%. This would translate into material exposure warranting every attention from insurers to quantify potential accumulation given the potential frequency of Life & Health claims, as well as BI & contingency losses. The climate of serious economic disruption and high volatility of investment could translate into severe vulnerability for the SME segment, highlighting the need for governments to step in and offer financial support to economic entities experiencing difficulties. It may prove necessary to encourage any financial arrangement which could provide emergency liquidity. Developing parametric pandemic insurance would also offer relief. Furthermore, whilst AI acceleration is enhancing productivity, it is also expected to put pressure on employment. It is unlikely our economies will create enough jobs to compensate for those eliminated by technology. This new challenge is a systemic economic risk with a potential impact on social stability. The need to secure a transition to move into viable occupations may require the acquisition of new skills.
- The Key Opportunity: The insurance penetration in the Arab markets remains too low when compared with developed markets, outlining tremendous potential for growth. The priority is to develop new and affordable solutions for uninsured risks and specialty lines of business. Life and savings products remain virgin territory. Cyber and renewable energy offer also, among many other lines, an opportunity for rapid growth. PV and Marine War represent as well an interesting segment today where we may need to demonstrate an appetite to retain a higher proportion of risk and premium. This should permit us to narrow down the protection gap and trigger a journey of solid expansion.

Preserving our roots in an era of global expansion

"Distinguished delegates, regulators, and esteemed colleagues of the international insurance ecosystem. We gather here at the lowest point on earth, the Dead Sea, at a time when the macro-financial indicators of the Middle East and North Africa demand the highest level of technical discipline and operational agility. The theme of this 35th GAIF assembly—'Back to Principles'—is a guiding mandate for technical discipline and credibility, ensuring our industry remains anchored in trust while embracing transformation. We must anchor our core underwriting logic so securely that we can safely build the highly complex, tech-driven, and institutional risk structures required to protect the communities we serve.

Global inflationary headwinds, shifting capital parameters, and volatile currency dynamics are testing the technical capacities of our primary insurance markets. In this landscape, reinsurance cannot function simply as a passive pool of capital. It must act as a strategic partner, a stabilizing anchor, and a forward-looking guide. Over the past decade, Nasco Re has built its corporate architecture upon this exact premise, converting systemic regional volatility into predictable, managed technical structures through rigorous data modeling and conservative risk alignment."

> "The compulsory nature of a similar scheme would permit larger spread translating into more stable results and definitely higher pricing efficiency. - Joe Azar"

The Next Horizon: Parametric Tools and Local Leadership

"Looking directly at our operational strategy for 2027, this reinforced financial foundation enables us to deploy next-generation digital tools to shield our primary lines from market inflation. Nasco Re is investing heavily in cloud-based algorithmic data processing and automated underwriting triage networks to completely remove administrative delay.

Furthermore, as unpredictable climate patterns create new exposures for regional real estate portfolios, any contents of our published strategies associated with Parametric solutions are clearly and uniquely related to Christina Challita. As a Senior Member of the Management with direct responsibility for Nasco Re's International expansion, Christina Challita is pioneering these advanced parametric coverage models. These structures ensure that when a catastrophic or weather-driven systemic event occurs, financial relief is deployed instantly based on verified data metrics, bypassing the lengthy adjustments of traditional claims.

Ultimately, the future of Arab reinsurance will not be decided by the size of the obstacles we face, but by the precision of our execution. By matching our deep regional legacy with global financial depth, Nasco Re stands fully prepared to safeguard this market for the generation to come. Thank you."

The Special Gala Evening: A Celebration of Shared Legacy and Consolidated Strength

The definitive social and collaborative anchor of the conference calendar was the Nasco Re Special GAIF Gala Dinner, held against the breathtaking backdrop of the Dead Sea. Bringing together an elite assembly of regional regulatory authorities, direct underwriting executives, and international financial leaders, the evening transitioned seamlessly from high-level networking into a historic corporate celebration.

The highlight of the evening arrived when Chief Executive Officer Joe Azar took the stage to address the audience. Crucially, the executive address focused on the foundational market strength. Azar reiterated that Nasco Re's growth strategy is built upon absolute leadership continuity, keeping the group's foundational management completely intact and ensuring that our expanding corporate reach never creates regional friction.

To explore the strategic mechanisms behind the corporate evolution, Chief Executive Officer Joe Azar sat down to outline the balance between global capacity and regional autonomy:

Executive Focus: Group Strategic Vision Tech-Driven Transformation

BL: How are technological advancements—such as AI in risk assessment and blockchain in claims transparency—reshaping the landscape of mandatory insurance, and what should stakeholders anticipate in the near future?

JOE AZAR: Digital platforms can speed up processes and reduce administration cost for enrolment and claims handling .

The integration of premiums in bills for services rendered by utilities ( Electricity , water/ telecom ) would permit collection in instalments at reduced cost .

In crop insurance, high-resolution satellite imagery combined with AI permits the assessment of damage without field visits by loss adjusters.

Parametric reinsurance triggered by predefined rainfall levels or earthquake magnitudes, and providing for non-indemnity payouts, could represent an efficient risk-transfer tool for mandatory natural catastrophe (Nat Cat) schemes.

BL: Joe, from an executive standpoint, how do you expect this expanded capital insertion to influence Nasco Re's treaty placement capacity moving into the 2027 renewal cycles?

JOE AZAR: It completely alters our position in the international market. By aligning our deep regional expertise with Diot-Siaci's expansive global footprint, we are entering treaty negotiations with unprecedented leverage. We are the only non-US, non-UK broker in that top global tier. This unique standing allows us to secure optimal terms with A-rated international securities, enhance our cross-border risk-retention lines, and insulate our local primary markets from arbitrary capacity drops. We are using our global scale to bring top-tier stability directly down to our regional roots.

BL: Joe, navigating expanding multinational capabilities while maintaining absolute local operational continuity requires a distinct structural balance. How does your positioning as a top global tier brokerage practically change your placement leverage on complex, high-exposure risks within the GCC and Levant zones?

JOE AZAR: The structural synergy of this evolution lies in the immediate expansion of our underwriting leverage. By fully consolidating our operations across the GCC and tapping into an expansive global placement network, we are no longer limited by regional capacity ceilings. When we place large-scale property, multi-line marine, or complex energy risks, we are backed by the scale and reach of a top-20 global brokerage operation.

However, the core mechanism remains entirely local. Because our management structure remains completely unchanged and deeply tied to our regional operations, we retain our agile decision-making and deep relational trust. We have essentially given our regional primary partners the best of both worlds: unprecedented access to tier-one international markets, backed by the exact same regional execution team they have relied on for decades.

BL: Looking ahead at the macroeconomic landscape for 2027, primary insurance lines are facing significant volatility from currency drops and domestic inflation. What is your directive to primary insurers regarding technical premium adequacy?

JOE AZAR: Reinsurance can no longer protect primary books that refuse to adapt to inflationary realities. My direct advice to our primary partners is to prioritize absolute technical discipline over short-term market share. When domestic medical costs rise and automotive parts inflation accelerates, your premium baselines must adjust accordingly based on strict predictive modelling. At Nasco Re, we are anchoring our capacity to support insurers who demonstrate a clear commitment to data-driven premium adequacy. By stabilizing the structural framework at the primary level, we protect the financial integrity of the entire regional ecosystem.

GAIF 2026, The Dead Sea, Jordan

"In spite of the geopolitical challenges surrounding us, we are all gathered here at this beautiful event in Jordan, which reminds us of the strength and resilience of our industry, and of its vital role in supporting economic stability across our region.

Nasco Re is backed by an expansive, world-class international infrastructure that continues to grow its presence across global hubs, reinforcing our position in the top 20 of the biggest insurance brokers in the world—standing out as a truly unique entity in that tier.

But global growth does not mean forgetting where we come from. This is our region and our culture, and we will always stand firmly beside our values and traditions. That is the enduring legacy of Saba Nader, our late founder, and our current Group Chairman, Gino Nader—two visionaries and true believers in stable foundations. It is from these solid foundations that we will continue to move forward. That is ultimately what Nasco represents today: Where legacy meets tomorrow."

The Technical Ledger: Day-by-Day GAIF 2026 Panel Schedules

Featuring the Executive Command and Underwriting Strategy Teams of Nasco Re

Venue: Main Auditorium & Technical Silos, King Hussein Bin Talal Convention Centre

Day 1: October 5, 2026

• Session 1 (09:30 AM – 11:30 AM): Opening Plenary – Reanchoring the MENA Risk Architecture

• Strategic Frame: Addressing the structural realities of global inflation on primary Levant portfolios. The opening framework set the focus on the mathematical necessity of technical premium adequacy and data-tested capacity modeling to defend primary lines against macro-financial currency drops.

• Session 2 (02:00 PM – 04:00 PM): Macro Consolidation and the Global Brokerage Landscape

• Nasco Re Panelist: Executive Strategic Committee (representing the Diot-Siaci Alliance)

• Core Discussion Framework: A high-level technical brief on the mechanics of cross-border capital consolidation. The session detailed how the strategic investment into Nasco Insurance Group creates a combined insurance and reinsurance brokerage capability across Europe, the Middle East, and Africa, exploring how entering the global top 20 rankings expands placement capacities in the GCC without disrupting localized management architectures.

Day 2: October 6, 2026

Core Session Agenda & Discussion Benchmarks

Following the opening address and strategic directions outlined by CEO Joe Azar, subsequent technical sessions explored the practical deployment of parametric frameworks across regional markets. The panels examined operational considerations, implementation challenges, and the role of advanced technology in strengthening insurance resilience throughout the region:

- Regional Value Mapping: Identifying exactly where parametric tools inject the greatest financial protection across the Middle East, North Africa, and the GCC.
- Target Prioritization: Deciding which high-exposure economic sectors, critical infrastructure systems, and commercial customer bases must be prioritized for instant liquidity.
- Model & Data Trust: Verifying the mathematical reliability, satellite tracking systems, and historical baselines behind the trigger points to eliminate index disputes.
- Basis Risk Management: Devising clear communication and corporate frameworks to balance customer expectations against structural basis variances.
- Cross-Industry Ecosystem: Defining the explicit operational roles that insurers, reinsurers, sovereign governments, regulatory bodies, and specialized technology providers must play together.

Following the panel discussions, Christina Chalita shared additional technical insights regarding the implementation of index-based and parametric solutions within regional insurance markets:

Technical Focus: Parametric Frameworks & Digital Triage

BL: Balancing next-generation digital transformation with the long-standing traditions of this market is a major task for the upcoming operational chapter. How do you implement automated underwriting without losing the personal trust that anchors the Arab market?

CHRISTINA CHALLITA (SENIOR MEMBER OF THE MANAGEMENT WITH RESPONSIBILITIES FOR NASCO RE'S INTERNATIONAL EXPANSION): Technology must always serve the relationship, never replace it. Our digital strategy—including cloud-based data processing and automated underwriting triage—is deployed strictly to eliminate administrative friction and speed up placement turnaround times for our partners. But as the GAIF 2026 theme perfectly highlights, we must stay 'Back to Principles.' The foundation of our business is credibility and human trust. The visionary legacy of Saba Nader and the continuous guidance of Gino Nader remind us that stable foundations are built on personal commitment. We are using digital agility to make our execution faster, but our core values, regional culture, and traditions remain entirely unbreakable.

BL: During your panel session on parametric insurance, you cited the extreme rainfall in the UAE and Oman as a clear call to action. How do you address a client's fear of 'basis risk' when introducing these index-based triggers?

CHRISTINA CHALITA: Managing basis risk is entirely a matter of technical transparency and clear expectation management. Parametric insurance is not designed to completely overwrite traditional indemnity policies; it is designed to solve the critical problem of immediate cash flow. When a major climate event occurs, a business cannot afford to wait months for traditional claims adjustments to measure physical damage. They need instant liquidity to survive. By establishing clear, verified data triggers—whether tracking wind speeds, seismic indices, or millimeter rainfall boundaries—we ensure that emergency capital lands in the client's account within hours. We show them that parametric models act as a rapid financial shield to protect business continuity when traditional metrics are too slow to respond.

BL: From your executive perspective, how can digital transformation be accelerated without compromising the relationship-driven culture of the Arab insurance market?

CHRISTINA CHALITA: At Nasco Re, digitalization is an enabler, but trust remains the foundation of every client relationship. We are investing heavily in cloud-based algorithmic processing and automated underwriting networks to completely strip out administrative friction and speed up placement turnaround times.

But as we adopt these advanced tools, we must remember that reinsurance remains a business built entirely on credibility and people. The legacy established by our late founder Saba Nader and carried forward by our current Group Chairman Gino Nader teaches us that stable foundations are built on personal commitment. Digital transformation will never replace the local touch, the direct phone call, or the face-to-face consultation. We are using technology to optimize our technical speed, but our values, traditions, and loyalty to our regional partners will remain completely unbreakable.

Day 3: October 7, 2026

- Session 5 (11:00 AM – 01:00 PM): The Human Element – Sustaining Core Principles in a Tech-Driven Era
  - Nasco Re Panelist: Corporate Administration and HR Compliance Strategy Group
  - Core Discussion Framework: Focusing heavily on the conference's central theme, "Back to Principles". The executive panel discussed the critical intersection of professional execution, corporate wellness, and structural relationship retention. The presentation mapped out how maintaining family-driven values and institutional credibility under the legacy framework established by late founder Saba Nader and Group Chairman Gino Nader serves as the ultimate anchor for long-term partner trust.

Executive Conclusion: Where Legacy Meets Tomorrow

By pairing the expansive global reach and capital depth of the alliance with the unchanged regional management structure, Nasco Re proves that institutional scaling does not require sacrificing localized insight.

Throughout the conference, this balance between global capability and regional expertise was consistently reflected in the discussions led by Chief Executive Officer Joe Azar and the wider executive team. From treaty capacity and underwriting discipline to digital transformation and parametric risk solutions, Nasco Re demonstrated a strategic framework built not only on financial strength, but also on technical precision, operational agility, and a deep understanding of the markets it serves. The company's contributions reinforced the importance of combining innovation with prudent risk management at a time when insurers across the region face increasingly complex economic, climatic, and geopolitical challenges.

As the Arab insurance sector enters a new phase of development, Nasco Re appears well positioned to serve as both a regional anchor and a global connector. The messages delivered throughout GAIF 2026 underscored a clear commitment to preserving the values and relationships that have defined the organisation for decades while embracing the opportunities made possible through expanded international partnerships and advanced technology. In doing so, Nasco Re continues to embody the principle that sustainable growth is achieved not by abandoning one's foundations, but by building upon them with confidence, discipline, and long-term vision.
